FREE FOUNDVITAL CHECKLIST

Seven Questions to Ask Before You Change Your Midlife Health Routine

Maybe you've read the articles, saved the videos, and tried to keep up with conflicting advice about nutrition, strength, sleep, and recovery. Before adding something else, take a few minutes to think about what matters to you. Use this as a reflection tool. There are no scores, diagnoses, or perfect answers.

1 What am I actually hoping to make easier?

Think about daily routines, time for movement, consistency, or how you'd like to feel about your approach. Write one goal in your own words.

MY NOTES

2 What's already working, and worth keeping?

You don't have to start from zero. List one or two habits that feel realistic, useful, or enjoyable.

MY NOTES

3 What advice have I collected but not really made my own?

Choose one idea you'd like to understand more clearly. More saved posts don't automatically mean more progress.

MY NOTES

4 Which topic do I most want to learn about next?

Nutrition? Strength? Sleep? Recovery? Pick one educational topic to explore. If your concern is a new or ongoing symptom or medical issue, speak with your licensed healthcare professional.

MY NOTES

5 What tends to throw my routine off?

Think about busy workweeks, caregiving, travel, fatigue, conflicting schedules, or plans that ask for more time than you have.

MY NOTES

6 What's one commitment that could fit my ordinary week?

Keep it concrete and flexible. It might be setting aside time to plan meals or deciding when to make movement a priority. This is personal goal-setting, not an exercise or nutrition prescription.

MY NOTES

7 What kind of support would help me follow through?

Maybe it's a worksheet, a repeatable planning routine, trusted educational information, or a conversation with a coach. There is no right answer.

MY NOTES

TAKE IT INTO YOUR WEEK

My Three Practical Commitments

One topic I want to explore

Something I already do well

One practical commitment I choose

Tara Schmidt, PA-C, DipACLM
Founder, FoundVital Reset™

The next step doesn't have to be a bigger plan. If you're interested in a more structured way to bring nutrition, strength, and recovery together, explore FoundVital Reset™, a 12-week coaching program guided by a PA with 16 years of clinical experience, with educational resources and scheduled guidance from Tara.

Explore FoundVital Reset™

reset.foundvital.com

For general education and personal reflection only. Not medical advice, diagnosis, or treatment, or a substitute for care from a licensed healthcare professional.